

Command

Command is the four monthly journal of the Company of Master Mariners of India which is distributed free to every member and to select people within the maritime industry and government authorities.

Command was established in 1977. It disseminates the official position of CMMI on various issues affecting master mariners. It upholds the interests of all Indian seafarers in general and master mariners in particular. In last 33 years it has become the voice of the experienced navigator. It has been responsible to influence or even change the decisions of government authorities, particularly when those decisions were detrimental to interests of seafarers.

It is also the perfect forum to share your ideas, concerns, and experiences with others in your field. Not with just those from within your company or buddies from your alma mater, but with those in your profession from all over the nation, even world. Command's avid readers are found under many flags, afloat and ashore. You are welcome to write to the editor (on address or email of CMMI) on any maritime subject. Your views will be read by owners, masters, marine superintendents, examiners and navigation teachers. Many new ideas have stemmed from the pages of Command. Command publishes articles on India's maritime history which is still a largely neglected subject. Candidates appearing for competency examinations have found contents of Command of great benefit to them.

An issue will typically include:

- Editorial
- From Master's desk,
a report written by the Master of CMMI.
- Letters from readers
- Timely articles on topical and other subjects of interest to mariners
- Photographs of recent events
- Recent ship acquisitions by Indian owners
- Reports from chapters
- Reviews of books on maritime subjects
- Recent Shipping Developments
- The Final Voyage (obituaries)
- New members enrolled
